Your novel will be uploaded and you will have several choices of how you can share it. For adding to a Google Map, you might want to use the URL. For adding to a wiki or blog or website, I recommend using the Large Cover (it isn't that large) and copy the embed code.

Youblisher!

May 6th, 2011 · No Comments · Cool Tools · Edit

My colleagues and I have been searching for a way to display a self-published book or graphic novel on blogs and wikis and have it look like a real-life book, smooth page turning etc. Until I found Youblisher, the search was in vain. All you need to do is upload a PDF (and if your document is NOT a PDF, go to PDFLite or one of the other free online converters), give it a title, description and tags and Voila! You are given URLs (handy if you want to link your book to a Google map or just email a link) and embed codes. Once embedded, your readers just have to click on the image of the book in your post or on your page and they are whisked away to Youblisher Land, where digital books look and sound (yes you can hear the pages turning) like the real thing. Awesome!

Write your blog, wiki or site post. Use the embed code to embed your novel on the site. When readers click on the image of your novel, they will go to the Flash animated Youblisher site where they can read the novel, turn the pages, download and print.
